Lead Follow-Up Sequence™

The decision-driven follow-up framework for leads that did not book on the first interaction.

For operators who already have demand.

This is about converting more of the demand you already paid for into booked jobs, completed work and cash.

1. The rule: every lead gets a next step

A follow-up system is not a pile of messages. It is a decision tree. The next message depends on what happened before it.

- Booked → confirmation and preparation.
- Replied but not booked → remove the next objection.
- No response → continue the defined sequence.
- Unqualified → close the loop and record why.

2. The core sequence

A practical sequence is: immediate acknowledgement, qualification, booking prompt, proof/FAQ, availability reminder, final check-in, then long-term reactivation only if appropriate.

- Keep early messages short.
- Make each touch earn its place.
- Use the prospect's service, location and stated problem when available.

3. Phone + SMS + email should agree

The prospect should experience one process, not three departments. If the phone call says one thing and the follow-up says another, trust falls.

- Use one source of truth for status.
- Summarize calls into the same record used by follow-up.
- Stop automation immediately when a human takes over.

4. Build the exception queue

Automation should surface exceptions: high-value jobs, angry customers, urgent service, unclear scope, repeated no-response, failed payment or unusual requests.

- Set dollar thresholds for human review.
- Set service/urgency rules.
- Give the owner a daily exception list instead of a noisy inbox.

5. Measure the sequence

Do not optimize open rates in isolation. The business outcome is booked jobs and profitable completed work.

- Measure contact rate, booking rate, speed-to-lead and recovered opportunities.
- Compare performance by lead source and service.
- Kill steps that create activity without improving the funnel.
